The background consists of a teal rectangle with a white circle in the top left, an orange triangle in the top right, and a light blue octagon in the center.

Families and caregivers are the essential connective tissue in learning experiences for children; they provide space for curiosity and critical conversation as well as the generational knowledge that is essential to raising a more equitable society.

—Nawal Qarooni, p.34

The background is orange with a large teal circle on the right and a grey curved shape on the left.

With a few shifts in perspective and intention, family-teacher relationships can blossom and make a huge difference in a student's learning. Teachers must get beyond the one-way communication activities we've relied on for so long and develop trust and mutual respect with the families we serve.

—Jamila Dugan, p. 20

The background is white with a large red circle on the left and a grey rectangle on the right.

For too long, parents of color and caregivers from underrepresented backgrounds have been shut out of conversations and decisions directly impacting their own children. ... Schools must now do everything in their power to ensure a return to normalcy does not mean these important voices are ignored once again.

—Maya Martin Cadogan, p. 84

The background is orange with a large red circle on the right and a grey triangle on the left.

With a few shifts in perspective and intention, family-teacher relationships can blossom and make a huge difference in a student's learning. Teachers must get beyond the one-way communication activities we've relied on for so long and develop trust and mutual respect with the families we serve.

—Jamila Dugan, p. 20